

ABSTRACT

An inertial temperature control system and method are provided for changing the temperature of a body between two temperatures such that the ending temperature is reached smoothly without substantial temperature overshoot or oscillation. A temperature control
5 algorithm is fed a set point temperature that accelerates and decelerates at a physically attainable rate.